Fantastic Adventures was an American pulp fantasy and science fiction magazine, published from 1939 to 1953 by Ziff-Davis. By May 1941 the magazine was on a regular monthly schedule. Fantastic Adventures soon developed a reputation for light-hearted and whimsical stories. Much of the material was written by a small group of writers under both their own names and house names. The cover art, like those of many other pulps of the era, focused on beautiful women in melodramatic action scenes. One regular cover artist was H.W. McCauley, whose glamorous "MacGirl" covers were popular with the readers, though the emphasis on depictions of attractive and often partly clothed women did draw some objections from readers. The March 1953 issue of Fantastic Adventures was the last. This book contains 2 complete issues of Fantastic Adventures, including all of the original advertising. (Alas, too late for you to win a brand new 1940 Packard!) ENJOY!
